PRESS RELEASE

City of Leon Valley Shows Support for Our Exempt Businesses While Reminding Citizens to Stay Safe

The City of Leon Valley purchased and began putting up signs in front of businesses to remind those traveling in and around our City that we remain open for Exempt Businesses and Essential Services and want everyone to support them. They also purchased public service safety signs to remind people to wash their hands, practice social distancing, and to be informed, be prepared, be smart, and be safe. These signs are designed to bring awareness to locations that have remained open so that those in the community can remember to support them during these trying times. These signs will be up as long as the Stay Home, Stay Safe Order is in effect.

City Manager Kelly Kuentler stated in a news release, “We should all stay home and heed the warnings of our elected officials to help flatten the curve on this virus. That said, if you have to get out for essential items or doctor’s visits, please stop by your local businesses and help support the staff. The employees have all been deeply affected by the stay home order and can use all the support you can give.”

Interim City Manager and Chief of Police Joseph Salvaggio stated, “Essential Businesses remain open and critical to our ability to stay home for such a long period of time. I feel for their employees and know that they need to feel supported and be supported during this time of need. While we truly need to stay home as much as possible, if you get out, remember your favorite restaurant or mom-and-pop store needs your support. Please support them as you can, and tip them well for their service.”
